We all know what we mean by a “good” man. The ideally good man does not drink or smoke, avoids bad language, converses in the presence of men only exactly as he would if there were ladies present, believes in God, attends prayers regularly and holds the correct opinion on all subjects. He has a wholesome horror of wrong-doing and realizes that it is our painful duty to castigate sin. He has a still greater horror of wrong thinking, and considers it the business of the authorities to safeguard the young against those who question the wisdom and the views generally accepted by middle-aged, successful citizens. Apart from his professional duties, at which he is assiduous, he spends much time in good social and humanitarian works: he may encourage patriotism and military training; he may promote industry, sobriety and virtue among wage earners and their children by seeing to it that failures in these respects receive due punishment; he may be a trustee of a university, works to promote quality education and prevents an ill-judged respect for learning from allowing the employment of professors with revolutionary ideas. Above all, of course, his “morals” in the narrow sense must be flawless.

From housing to farming to healthcare to travel to clothing; everything that the present human society uses with such ease and comfort has been improved through experiments, application of mind and enterprise. Clothing from winter garments to Burqas to polo caps to sarees to Kimono to Dhotis to western suits, all have gone through a process of evolution and innovation. Today, in the globalized world, one sees myriad varieties of clothing people use. The variation is due to weather conditions, overhang of culture, economic status and religion. Just as all items—from medicines to safety razors to aero-planes have a history behind them, clothing has a history of it's own. Apart from the purely functional needs, clothing represents our sense of fashion, aesthetics and beauty. The most eventful periods in the history of clothing were the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. It is interesting to know why it was so. Before the winds of democracy swept through Europe, and capitalist markets developed in eighteenth century Europe, people were rather too orthodox in their dresses. Mass-produced textiles and clothing had not entered the market. So, one could not experiment with clothes, even if one attempted to. Rigid feudal society was conformist giving little leeway for any sort of innovation in clothing.

- (d) Write the summary of the following passage in about 50 words:
 One of our most difficult problems is what we call discipline and it is really very complex to explain, to be understood and followed. You see, society feels that it must control or discipline the citizen, shape his mind according to certain religious, social, moral, ethical, economic and national or patriotic patterns. Is discipline necessary at all is the question that hangs on the minds of every youth? Please listen carefully. Don't immediately say YES or NO. Most of us feel, especially while we are young, that there should be no discipline, that we should be allowed to do whatever we like and we think, that is freedom. But merely to say that we should not be free and should be restricted by any norms or rules, has very little meaning without understanding the whole problem of discipline. The keen athlete is disciplining himself the whole time, isn't he? His joy in playing games and the very necessity to keep fit makes him go to bed early, refrain from smoking, eat the right food and generally observe the rules of good health. His discipline and punctuality is not an imposition but a natural outcome of his enjoyment of athletics. Hence, if you need to be successful in your career or life you have to be disciplined.
